pupil, but soon became an assistant to his master. In 1785 he set up a studio of his own in London, achieving marked popularity and financial success. He visited Ireland in 1788, where he was received with great favor, and painted the portraits of many distinguished persons. He returned to America in 1792.

Among his sitters in Europe were Louis XVI, George III and George IV, while Prince of Wales. He also painted Alderman Boydell, John Kemble, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Benjamin West and many distinguished artists. The six presidents of the United States who sat to him for their portraits were George Washington, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe and John Quincy Adams.

His portrait of Sir Ashley Cooper, the sixth Earl of Shaftesbury, in the Toledo Museum, was painted in Washington, D. C., in 1799. Sir Ashley's grandfather was the Ashley Cooper who obtained the grant of the State of South Carolina, which he proposed to develop solely in his personal interest. but for some reason failed to carry out his plans. 45. NOTRE DAME, PARIS.

England

WALTER GREAVES.

Walter and Henry Greaves were pupils and close companions of Whistler as far back as 1863. The father of the Greaves boys was a boat builder in Chelsea. He had rowed Turner about on the river as his two sons were later to row Whistler. The Greaves boys idolized their master and apparently had but little thought of themselves and their own talents. Walter Greaves has lived quietly all these years in Chelsea in comparative obscurity. In 1911, when he was seventy years of age, an exhibition of his works was brought together in the Goupil Galleries, London, and the news was flashed throughout the world that a master as great as Whistler himself had received tardy recognition. Walter Greaves' style is very similar to that of Whistler, and yet it has unusual charm and great qualities all its own. Some two years before Walter Greaves was "discovered" to the world, Mr. Carl B. Spitzer, of Toledo, rummaging about in an old London book shop, found a striking portrait of Whistler in oil signed by Greaves. Recognizing its importance, he purchased it and presented it to the Toledo Museum of Art. Aside from its artistic excellence, it is also one of the most interesting and valuable portraits of Whistler in existence.

46. Portrait of James McNeill Whistler. Gift of C. B. Spitzer.

JOHN LAVERY.

One of a group of painters known as the Glasgow School. He was born in Belfast, Ireland, in 1858. Studied art at Haldane Academy, Glasgow, Heatherley's, London, and in Paris under Bouguereau and Tony Robert-Fleury. Among his best known paintings are the "Bridge at Grez," in the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh; his "Tennis Party," in the New Pinakothek, Munich; "The State Visit of the Queen to Glasgow," in the Corporation Gallery, Glasgow; "A Lady in Black," in the National Gallery, in Berlin, and "The Rocking Chair," in the Scottish National Gallery, Edinburgh.

47. Moonlight, Tetuan, Morocco. Gift of C. W. Kraushaar.

68. The Weaver. Gift of Harry E. King.

PAVEL D. SCHMAROFF.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts, St. Petersburg, Russia. His "Lady in Carriage" was awarded a Gold Medal at the St. Louis Exposition. The picture, which is most interesting technically, shows a lady in black driving in a Victoria on the crowded boulevard. It is the impression of a second, the wink of an eye. The swish of the boulevard is indicated swiftly, but surely, with a few strokes of the brush. Christian Brinton, the eminent critic, in an article in the Booklover's Magazine, writes of Schmaroff's brilliant, fluent handling and exquisite melting tonality. "In his Lady in Carriage," says the writer, "the artist enters the ultra modern and modish sphere of existence with equal felicity. His work reveals the easy mastery of our latter day apostles of Velasquez without the least sacrifice of Slavic flavor."

S. M. SEIDENBERG.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts, St. Petersburg, Russia. His painting, "The Plowers," was shown at the St. Louis Exposition under the title, "Episode in the Reign of Roman Galitsky." The Prince of Red Russia, returning from a successful campaign against Lithuania, brought home an enormous number of Lithuanian prisoners, whom he caused to be treated like cattle, yoking them to crude wooden plows. The picture shows three men and a woman, driven afield like beasts, hitched with shackled hands and feet to the plow, or ralo, as it was called. Christian Brinton, writing of this painting in the Booklovers' Magazine for February, 1906, says: "For strength of handling, coupled with a moving sense of nature and a profound appreciation of dumb agony and forbearance, it would be difficult to excel Seidenberg's canvas."

70. THE PLOWERS. Gift of Albion E. Lang.

V. P. VERESTCHAGIN.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts, Russia. His painting, "The Golden Cloud," was shown in the Russian section at the St. Louis Exposition. It illustrates a passage in the poem entitled "The Cliff," by the Russian poet, Lermontoff. A cloud has rested on the mountain top during the night, and now, bathed in the gold of the morning sun, it floats gently away, leaving the mountain sad and dejected.

71. THE GOLDEN CLOUD. Gift of A. M. Chesbrough.

I. A. VELTZ.

Member of the St. Petersburg Society of Artists. One of the Russian painters represented in the Russian section of the St. Louis Exposition.

JANUARIUS ZICK.

Born in 1733 in Munich. He was at first a pupil of his father, Johann Zick, but in 1757 he went to Basle and then to Rome. On his return he was, in 1761, appointed court painter at Coblentz. He also painted extensively in the churches of Upper Swabia and in Biberach. He died at Ehrenbreitstein in 1797.

74. The Crown of Thorns. Gift of J. G. Moulton.

SALVATOR ROSA.

Born near Naples, Italy, in 1615. When but eighteen years of age, he associated with and studied the bandits, and many compositions from his brush deal with the exciting experiences incident to their career. He was noted as a painter of battle scenes, his figures being full of movement and expression.

The Scandinavian Exhibition

Under the generous patronage of Christian X of Denmark, Gustaf V of Sweden, and Haakon VII of Norway, the American Scandinavian Society has brought to this country 150 paintings by artists of Norway, Sweden and Denmark for exhibition in New York, Buffalo, Toledo, Chicago and Boston.

The general aim of this society is to cultivate close relationship between the people of the United States and of the Scandinavian countries, particularly, by introducing to the American public, authentic examples of the culture and intellectual tendencies of the three chief countries peopled by the Scandinavian race. Private collectors and the artists themselves have vied with one another in lending and seeking out what is vital in the art of their respective countries.

Leonard Ochtman, N. A.

Leonard Ochtman was born at Zonnemaire, Holland, in 1854. His parents came to this country when he was about ten years old and went to reside at Albany, New York. It was thereabout that he began to draw and paint from nature, guiding himself entirely from the suggestions afforded by the pictures which he saw in the art dealers' galleries, in occasional public exhibitions and in such private collections as were accessible. Practically self-taught, Ochtman has won a foremost position among the artists of this country who have taken the lead in studying nature in the light of the open air. He is keenly sensitive to the quiet moods of nature and to the manifestation of subtlest quality. Few canvases equal his in refinement of observation and delicate tonality.

George S. Elwell

George S. Elwell was born at Elyria, Ohio, and began his art studies at Cincinnati in 1872 under Henry Mosler. Later he became a pupil of Thomas S. Noble at the Cincinnati Art Academy, and still later received instruction from Chase, Dewing, Turner and Sartain at the Art Students' League, New York.

Mr. Elwell's landscapes have a tenderness and charm of color peculiarly their own. The subjects for his canvases he finds in and about Toledo, where his studio is located.
